PROJECT MANAGEMENT

From its traditional role as a driver in construction, engineering, and IT sectors, Project Management has evolved into a dynamic discipline that shapes the operations of middle and large sized organisations across every industry. Project Management calls for advanced vocational skills around costing and compliance, scheduling and risk, problem solving and procurement – skills that, in combination, make PM professionals highly employable going forward.

World class aptitudes are a passport to world class opportunities
The applied skills and management strategies needed to coordinate the realisation of complex projects mean that Project Management is now among the most dynamic and rewarding of careers. It is also among the most versatile – the discipline and practice of PM provides exciting challenges and fresh opportunities to management practitioners from a variety of professional backgrounds.

• Rolling start dates and choice of delivery mode – classroom, online, onsite
• Individuals leverage existing knowledge to achieve a nationally accredited qualification
• Businesses translate vocational learning into positive measurable outcomes.
